

INNOCENT™

Classroom

Trainer Position Available

Start Date: Spring 2018

The Constructing the Innocent Classroom® program is a transformative professional development experience for K-12 educators. Our workshop series changes how teachers think about and engage their students, especially students of color. The Innocent Classroom is at work in thousands of classrooms, doing something no other response to disparity does – building relationships between teachers and children to close the achievement gap.

The Innocent Classroom® program empowers educators to connect authentically and individually with each child – building relationships that interrupt stereotypes and negative narratives and that reconnect each child with their unlimited potential. Over five years we've shown that relationships, constructed educator by educator and classroom by classroom, can close educational disparities.

Job Description: Trainers work directly with our partners in dynamic workshop settings. Trainers speak in front of large or small groups, build community with workshop participants, and lead participants in the meaningful practice of Innocent Technologies' proprietary relationship building methodology. Successful candidates will participate in Innocent Technologies' training program. Trainers are critical members of our training team and must be able to work alongside our Program Managers and our partners.

Qualifications:

- 3+ years training experience
- Bachelor's degree
- Knowledge and understanding of implicit bias, stereotype consciousness, and stereotype threat.
- Strong critical thinking skills.
- Understand group dynamics and adjust presentation style to the needs of the group.
- Ability to critically assess how participants are engaging with content.
- Comfortable presenting to large and small groups of participants.
- Strong speaker, engaging, and able to build trusting relationships.
- Passionate, brilliant, professional, expert leaders who believe in the unlimited potential of our children.
